WILBUR WRIGHT IS VICTIM OF TYPHOID

Conqueror of the Air Battles Gamely Against Fatal Illness.

UNCONSCIOUS FOR TWO WEEKS

Taken Ill Following Trip East and Meal of Fish and Clam Broth in Boston May Have Brought on Sickness—Other Complications Develop.

United Press Telegram.

DAYTON, O., May 30.—Fighting death with the grim determination and indefatigable energy that characterized his conquests over the air, Wilbur Wright, aged 45, died of typhoid fever at 3.15 this morning at the family home here. His venerable father, Bishop Milton Wright, sister Katherine and brothers Orville, Lorin and Reuchlin were at his bedside when the end came, as was also Dr. D. B. Conklin.

Returning from a short business trip through the east May 2, Mr. Wright complained of not feeling well. Looking back to the probable cause of his indisposition, he recalled having eaten fish and clam broth at a Boston hotel. On Saturday, May 4, he was obliged to take to his bed. Two nurses were secured and to the professional services of Dr. Conklin were added the services of Dr. Levi Spitler. Dr. Frederick Forchelmer, of Cincinnati, was called into consultation May 22.

The case early evidenced the symptoms of typhoid fever in what the doctors declared to be the most virulent form. It was marked by the excessive toxaemia and the case was obstructed by the intense cerebral activity of the patient, due to his great mental strain incidental to plans for further developments of the aeroplane and anxiety over the outcome, and labor incidental to litigation involving patent rights.

The fever rose to 103, 104 and 105 and on last Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock the patient was suddenly plunged into an intense chill, when his temperature rose to 106. The cause of the chill is not known, the doctors say. On Monday a slight kidney and bladder complication developed and threatened much trouble but was apparently overcome within 24 hours. On Wednesday at 7 P. M. Mr. Wright was able to take a proper amount of nourishment for his condition, but his stupor was somewhat greater. He had been unconscious for approximately two weeks and during that period his eyes rolled about as if in a slight conscious effort to fasten upon members of the family. The doctors say that his clean mode of living and his consequent rugged constitution was all that prolonged his life.

CONELLSVILLE TAKES THE MORNING GAME 4 TO 2

McKeesport Tubers Blow Up in the Eighth and Cokers Win Second Game Here.

About 1000 people saw Connellsville celebrate their home coming by walloping McGrath's McKeesport aggregation 4 to 2. It looked like McKeesport's game until the seventh when the Cokers squeezed one across. Foster singled with two out. Smith had a wild pitch and the left fielder dropped a hard hit ball, Foster scoring. McKeesport tallied in the second on Zimmerman's double and Mack's error.

In the eighth Mack reached first on an error. Hart bunted through Smith's legs. Clark got a walk and Getsle singled, two runs scoring. McKeesport scored one in the ninth.

Dick Clark made his appearance in the Coker outfield and celebrated his first day making a circus catch in the first inning. It was Mack's first day as manager.

MEMORIAL DAY---FIFTY YEARS AFTER.

The music of the war no longer breathes
Of battlefields, but rather of the sorrow
That is expressed by garlands and by wreaths,
By swords that slumber in their unused sheaths
And by the past heroic that bequeaths
Its spirit to the nation of tomorrow.

VETERAN SOLDIERS PAY TRIBUTE TO DEPARTED COMRADES WITH EXERCISES AT HILL GROVE CEMETERY THIS MORNING

Thin Blue Line Parades With Escort of Band and Militia—Thirty-Eight Civil War Soldiers Participate in the Exercises—Brief Services Follow Decoration of Graves.

FORTY THOUSAND MORE.

by J. R. Balsley

When first to the comrades' graves
Our floral tributes we bore
Their mounds were many, but now—
There are forty thousand more.

The rapidly thinning line of veteran soldiers of the Civil War paid tribute to the memory of their departed comrades today with appropriate exercises at Hill Grove cemetery. Thirty-eight men who saw service in the Civil War participated in the exercises. They were given an escort of honor by the Connellsville Military Band, Company D and veterans of the Spanish-American war.

The members of William F. Kurtz Post No. 104, G. A. R., met promptly at nine o'clock at the City Hall. Carriages were placed at the disposal of the veterans and the trip to Chestnut Hill cemetery was made where the graves of the dead soldiers there were decorated. The details were accompanied by the Connellsville Military Band. Grand Army of the Republic services were observed at the Chestnut Hill cemetery. The detail returned to Hall shortly before 10 o'clock. The procession formed promptly and the column slowly marched to Hill Grove Cemetery. The pace was slow. The Connellsville Military Band played the "Dead March" and "Nearer My God to Thee" on the way.

The services at the cemetery were brief. The G. A. R. ritual was observed. The colors were held high and at the command of Commander Lloyd Johnson, the veterans saluted. Adjutant E. Dunn read the first order commanding the observance of a day given over to decorating the graves of the dead of the Civil War.

"Speaking of the observance of the day," Captain Dunn said, "While we are decorating the graves of comrades who are dear to us and who lie here, let us not forget those who died and who lie now in unmarked graves. Let us not forget those that lie along the Potomac, in the bloody Wilderness, along the Rappahannock or from Atlanta to the sea."

Following Captain Dunn's speech, the regular service was followed. Mrs. F. O. Goodwin took part in the services in behalf of the Ladies Circle of the G. A. R. The decoration of the graves followed and Company D of the Tenth regiment fired a volley. Taps was sounded.

Returning the procession moved through Snyder street, down Main to Prospect, out Prospect to Fairview and Carnegie avenues. While Roy O. Clabaugh played the Star Spangled Banner, the column stopped and uncovered. Citizens stood uncovered as the national anthem rang out on the air. Following the ringing of the chimes the Command was dismissed.

The ranks of the veterans have thinned considerably since last year's Memorial day. Old bent and gray men took part in the procession. Commander Lloyd Johnson marched at the head of the procession. Thirty-eight veterans were in the parade altogether 32 being on foot and six in carriages.

The Connellsville Military Band with a full quota of men marched at the head of the parade. Company D followed with 40 men in line commanded by Captain A. R. Kidd. Then came the veterans followed by the Sons of the Veterans and the Spanish War Veterans.

BOYS ARRESTED FOR JUNK THEFT

Are Alleged to Have Stolen Brass From Machine and Car Co.

FINE ASSESSED BY JUSTICE

Police Believe They May Also Have Been Implicated in Stripping Brass Fittings From Machinery at East Side Plant of Yough Ice Company.

With the arrest of Michael Gallo, George Vogel, Serfio Leper and Ralph Rhodes, the authorities believe they have the perpetrators of several brass thefts around the north end of town within the past few weeks. The four boys, ranging from 10 to 14 years of age, were arrested yesterday for stealing brass at the plant of the Connellsville Machine and Car Company to the value of $100.

About a week ago the East Side plant of the Yough Crystal Ice and Storage Company was entered and many brass caps and other trimmings on the machinery taken. The exact amount of the theft has not been determined. Entrance was effected through one of the windows. Nothing but the brass was taken. No trace of the thieves was found but it is believed that the four arrested yesterday are the guilty parties.

Brass was taken from the plant of the Connellsville Machine & Car Company several days ago. Yesterday afternoon the boys took it to the junk yard of Fred Munk and endeavored to sell it. Munk called up the company. A representative came to the junk yard and identified the brass. The arrest followed.

A hearing was held yesterday before Squire Donegan. On account of the extreme youth of the boys, they were allowed to go upon payment of the costs. Manager James McGrath claimed that there was still about $20 worth of the metal missing and this was made up by the boys' parents. It developed that the Rhodes boy was not connected with the robbery but was merely with the other boys. His father paid a fine, however. Michael Gallo is the brother of the Gallo boy who was committed for stealing candy and other articles from the West Penn waiting room some months ago.

PRETTY HOME WEDDING

Miss Annabel Millard Bride of Harry T. Lutterman.

Charming pink and white appointments marked the wedding of Miss Annabel Millard, eldest daughter of Mr. and Mrs. James B. Millard and Harry Lutterman of Dawson, which was solemnized last evening at 6 o'clock at the home of the bride in Trevor street in the presence of a number of friends and relatives of the bride and bridegroom. The impressive ring ceremony was performed by Rev. E. B. Burgess, pastor of the Trinity Lutheran church church of which the bride is a member, assisted by Rev. H. A. Baum, pastor of the Cochran Memorial Methodist church at Dawson. As the bridal party entered the parlor, where the ceremony was performed, Lohengrin's wedding march was played by Miss Jessie Rhodes. During the ceremony Schubert's Serenade was played and at the reception which followed the ceremony Mendelssohn's wedding march was rendered. The bride was given in marriage by her father and wore an exquisite toilet of white messaline satin with court train and handsomely trimmed with Duchess lace. Her bridal bouquet was a shower of white roses and valley lilies, tied with white messaline satin ribbon. The maid of honor, Miss Helen Millard, a sister of the bride wore a beautiful gown of pale green messaline with a bodice and drapery of pink satin messaline. She carried a shower bouquet of pink roses tied with messaline ribbon. Mr. W. W. Parkinson of Old Concord was best man. A reception and handsomely appointed wedding dinner followed the ceremony. Covers for eight were laid at the bride's table in the dining room. The centerpiece was a mound of pink Killarney roses, carnations and asparagus. Festooned around the table was an artistic arrangement of smilax. The place cards were suit cases and trunks mounted with cupids. Covers for the remainder of the guests were laid at small tables. The ice cream was served in white baskets and the pink and white color scheme was cleverly carried out in the dinner. Twenty-seven covers were laid. The decorations in the parlor were unusually pretty. The mantel and fire place were banked with Killarney roses, carnations and ferns making an effective background for the bridal party. Vases of carnations intermingled with asparagus and portieres of smilax completed the decorative scheme. Bunches of pink and white roses adorned the stairway. Miss Zole Millard, a sister of the bride, caught the bride's bouquet. After the wedding dinner Mr. and Mrs. Lutterman left for Cambridge Springs for a wedding trip. The bridegroom is a well known business man of Dawson and is a son of Mr and Mrs. Arnold Lutterman of Dawson. The bride has resided in Connellsville nearly all her life and is well known. The wedding gifts were numerous and handsome. On their return they will be at home at Dawson.

TAKE YOUR WIFE'S ADVICE

Where Man Merely Creeps by Logic, Woman Leaps by Intuition at Single Bound.

Some one has said:

"When a man has toiled step by step up a flight of stairs he will be sure to find a woman at the top, but she may not be able to tell how she got there."

A man comes up to a conclusion by the slow steps of delicate logic. Instinctively the woman reaches it by a single bound.

Therefore, should you contemplate some important step without having consulted your wife—don't!

Her intuitive insight may be worth more than your deliberate reasoning.

Especially is the normal average woman quick to see the right or wrong involved in a proposition. She jumps over subtle distinctions and evasive phrasing and lands on the firm footing of eternal righteousness.

Ethically every woman is a seer.

And especially clear are the eyes of a wife in any matter involving the welfare or the good name of her family.

Make your wife a close confidant in all things, and the sequel will prove her wisdom.

There was Victoria Colonna.

She is a strong character in the history of her times. Her husband was a friend of the great Charles V. At one time her husband was offered the crown of Naples if he would join the league against Charles. The man was strongly tempted. He referred the matter to his wife. She bade him spurn the proposal.

Not every wife would thus refuse to be queen. But—

Most wives would!

Because the alliance contemplated the base betrayal of a friend, and the heart of a true woman instinctively is turned against such baseness.

Seek your wife's advice. She is your best friend, your most competent and wisest counselor.

The writer speaks from long experience. Almost invariably he has made a mistake when he failed to confer with his wife or has proceeded contrary to her advice.

A wife will help to clear away difficulties and suggest ways and means that might not occur to the husband.

"Two heads are better than one," especially if one be a woman's head."

Quotation on Wildcats.

The sons of J. E. Brower at Granville have sold their large live wildcat, captured one year ago, to R. Atwater of Akron, Ohio, for $8. The cat has been used to kill rats which infest Mr. Brower's barn.

The animal, which is apparently eight or ten years old and weighs fifteen pounds, killed ten rats in less than five minutes when they were thrown one by one into its cage. The boys had some dangerous sport with the wildcat a few days ago when they attached a plough line about its neck and pulled it from the cage. Mr. Brower stopped the sport before any of the lads were attacked by the ferocious animal. It was shipped by express to Akron.

We also desire to thank the lodges and friends from sending floral tributes. Also the choir. Mrs. C. J. Yarnell, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Yarnell.

"Lady Betty Faulkner" Sails for Europe on Third Wedding Trip—Oil Man is Bridegroom

NEW YORK, May 30.—In the suit de luxe of the Lusitania "Lady Betty" Faulkner, now the bride of Frank Clarence Henderson of New York and Oklahoma, is en route to Europe on her third honeymoon. Like the other two husbands, "Lady Betty's" latest counts his fortunes in oil stock. Mrs. Henderson's first husband was T. Irvin Chapman of Boston and New York, to whom she was married in 1900. Three years later she sued him for a divorce and her mother-in-law for alienating his affections. In 1905 the divorce was granted in Boston on the ground of desertion, her husband being at that time in Japan for the Standard Oil company. Not long afterward she became the wife of Roy E. Pierce, son of Henry Clay Pierce. It was the father who shattered the second romance by obtaining an annulment of the marriage on the ground that his son was mentally irresponsible at the time of the ceremony. This occurred last fall. The recent announcement of her engagement to Mr. Henderson was an entire surprise to all but her closest friends. Mrs. Henderson has been on the stage and has also been in demand as an artists' model on account of her beauty.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven Catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

LIGHTNING BOLT OVERTURNS ENGINE

Engineer is Pinned Beneath Locomotive and Dies Bravely.

UNUSUAL ACCIDENT ON B. & O.

Fast Freight Just Pulling Out of the Philadelphia Yards When Lightning Causes Monster Locomotive to Overturn—Three Others Fatally Hurt.

PHILADELPHIA, May 30.—From 7:45 o'clock last night until midnight 50 men attempted to raise a Baltimore & Ohio engine from the body of Daniel Edwards, engineer of a Baltimore & Ohio engine, which was struck by lightning at Second and Oregon streets. For four hours Edwards, pinned under the engine, directed the operations. Even with almost his last breath he begged of them to hurry.

"Get a wrecker," he pleaded, "all the men in Philadelphia couldn't lift this engine."

In a few more minutes he expired with a whispered communication to Policeman Daley to keep the news from his wife until morning. Once white Edwards was under the engine a physician from the Methodist Hospital endeavored to inject morphine in his arm. Edwards waved him aside, declaring if he was going to die he would die with all his faculties.

The engine of which Edwards was the master left for Baltimore dragging 30 cars of perishable freight.

The train was just about to pull out of the yards when there was a flash of lightning followed by a terrific roar. Mounted Policeman Daley was watching the engine. He saw it rise into the air, break the coupling of the first car and turn over into a ditch 10 feet deep to the right of the track. He rushed to the place. He heard groans and cries.

Beneath the engine was Daniel Edwards, 32 years old, the engineer, who lives in Frankfort, a suburb; Elmer Wright, 32 years old, fireman, Philadelphia; Morris McCullen, 41 years old, conductor, Philadelphia; Joseph Kane, 38 years old, brakeman, Philadelphia.

All of the men were in the cab of the engine while the train was pulling out of the yards. All were caught beneath the wreck. Daley grabbed an ax and attacked the woodwork which held Kane and McCullen. He liberated them, but only to have them taken to the Methodist Hospital and learn that they have no chance of life. They are crushed, numerous bones are broken and they are injured internally.

Returning to his work Daley blew his whistle for help. Other officers rushed to the scene and 50 reserves were called out. Edwards and Wright were held down by the mass of steel against which the blows of the ax had no effect. The 50 reserves gathered around the engine and managed to raise it enough to release Wright. When the monster engine dropped back Edwards was more thoroughly caught than before. He held the terrific weight of the engine on his body and with that he retained consciousness and life for four hours.

President Gomez Displeased at the Landing of U. S. Marines on Cuban Soil to Preserve Order

HAVANA, May 30.—President Jose Miguel Gomez is displeased with the landing of United States troops in Cuba, and he says that this course by the Washington government will hamper his efforts to restore order and suppress the negroes who have been causing trouble in many parts of the Island. Owing to the news censorship the real facts are not known, but few observers believe that Gomez will conquer the rebels soon. The insurgents are accustomed to guerrilla warfare, many of them having taken part in the last successful revolution. Being widely scattered, their suppression will be difficult even for the thousands of bluejackets who will soon be in Cuba.

THURSDAY EVE'G., MAY 30, 1912.

The Republican Situation.

The delegates to the Republican National Convention are about all chosen and the friends of both leading candidates are trying to demonstrate beyond a mathematical doubt that their particular candidate has the nomination cinched. Even the candidates themselves make positive announcements. President Taft says he has 578 delegates and will fight to "the last ditch." Colonel Roosevelt says he will be nominated on the first ballot. He also scorns compromise. His hat is in the ring to stay. To get into the running, the Dark Horse will have to force a passage between the bulky figure of Taft and the aggressive presence of Roosevelt. The feat, however, is not impossible with the assistance of the uninstructed delegates. The Chicago convention will be about the liveliest national convention since 1896. Concerning it the Pittsburg Gazette Times says:

It is evident that the purpose of Colonel Roosevelt is to attempt control of the Republican National Committee by pressing the question of the right of newly-elected National Committeemen to take their seats and assume their duties before the convention. Hitherto the old National Committee has remained in authority unchanged in membership until after adjournment of the succeeding National Convention. As its function is to make up the temporary roll of the convention there is a tactical advantage, but not necessarily permanent nor endorsed, in control of the committee. It would appear from the declared purposes of the Roosevelt people that they do not have faith in their own claims of having an actual majority of the convention, and that they rely upon their ability to force a premature reorganization of the National Committee as the sure means by which they may secure the coveted nomination. It would seem also that they place but small credence in rumors that certain delegates ostensibly elected for or committed to Taft are likely to desert. The situation is about as full of dynamite as the fondest bomb thrower could desire. Indeed, to change the figure of speech, stormy conditions are getting worse. It is an old saw that all signs fail in bad weather. For which reason any attempt to read the barometer as to Chicago would be just about that much lovers labor lost.

Concerning the National Committee, we can only repeat what we have already stated, that precedent should rule and the old committee be allowed to pass upon the numerous contests. Notwithstanding it is reported that a majority of the committee favors the nomination of Taft, it is evident that many of them do not favor the nomination of any man by any methods which will disorganize and defeat the Republican party; in other words, they are not ready to commit political suicide to further any man's ambition.

We regret to say that the Roosevelt committeemen are under suspicion of being unscrupulous in this regard because of the manner in which their claims are being pressed. They seek membership in the committee, or membership is sought for them, with the expectation that they will be Roosevelt members all the time; in fine, that prejudice not fairness shall govern their decisions.

The Courier voices the wish of every good Republican when it hopes that the Republican National Committee will never forget that it is a Republican committee sitting as a High Court of Justice, no matter whom shall be nominated by reason of its just judgments.

Vacant Tax Collectorships.

The announcement that the Legislature has evidently never contemplated the possibility of a Tax Collector dying in office, and that there is consequently nothing in the law authorizing the appointment of his successor, is possible, but there is certainly some remedy at law for the bondsmen who are responsible for the balances due on the unsettled duplicates of three years.

If the bondsmen are so liable their liability carries with it a right to collect the unpaid taxes either personally or through an authorized agent. It will, therefore, probably be found that while the law does not provide for the appointment of a new collector it authorizes the appointment of a deputy by the bondsmen.

Dunbar tax delinquents need not harbor the disturbing thought that they will not be given an opportunity to settle.

Youngstown thinks the rate on Connellsville coke to that point should be reduced from $1.30 to 85 cents. The Valley ironmakers made no objection to the railroads raising the Chicago rate in fact, they think it isn't high enough yet in comparison with the Valley rate.

The new Secretary of the Chamber of Commerce is attending a Peace Conference. As soon as that is over he will come to Connellsville. We trust he will come prepared for war. A successful Secretary must be alert and aggressive in advocating the advantages of Connellsville against competition, however amiable and accomplished he may be in persuading prospective industries to abide with us.

The announcement that the railroads consume 20 to 25% of the coal production of the country might furnish some excuse for some measure of railroad ownership in coal lands.

The Interstate Commerce Commission asserts exclusive jurisdiction in Lake coal rate cases. Such traffic is unquestionably interstate commerce and the claim of the federal commission is warranted by the facts. It is also desirable in the interest of justice for the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine all these cases. There should be no discrimination between Ohio and Pennsylvania coal.

Maryland and West Virginia have at last gotten their geographical bearings.

The Connellsville coke rate case is gathering new complainants as it goes, just as the Pittsburg coal rate case did. The Initiative in such cases always attracts affinities before the Referendum issues a rate Recall.

The Bedford Gazette carries at its masthead the following fluttering announcement from the New York World of 25 years ago, "The Bedford Gazette is a model among country newspapers." The compliment was merited when Editor "Nick" McGirr made the columns of The Gazette scintillate with his wit, but Editor McGirr is unhappily dead.

The Connellsville girl who attempted suicide by eating laundry soap was more original than those who seek eternity by the carbolic route.

The Connellsville schools are getting the fire drill down to minute fineness.

The investigation of the late election for officers of the United Mine Workers in the Pittsburg district suggests the possible wisdom of securing the services of some of the labor politicians to help count a majority in the Chicago convention.

Dawson is still up in the air about its proposed fall aviation meet.

The announcement that the Italians will celebrate another feast day with fireworks will be welcome. Connellsville never had such brilliant and beautiful fireworks displays as those of the Italians.

The Lake Erie and Western Maryland wedding ceremonies are being completed today and we may look for an early establishment of the household in running order.

Senator Smith's presentation of the Titanic inquiry may have been warm in spots, but perhaps not more so than the facts warranted. The British press and authorities may try to make light of it, but the ugly facts remain. It will be more creditable for both governments to face the situation, seek the cause of the disaster, place the responsibility for it and adopt such means as are possible to avoid its repetition.

Major McDowell nominates "Bob" Lincoln as a Dark Horse. It is a little early yet to enter this class of runners.

Congress voted Captain Rostron a gold medal, but no mention was made of J. Bruce Ismay. However, he fared better than the Captain of the Californian, who refused to heed the Titanic's signals of distress. He was specially mentioned.

The Connellsville letter carriers want their vacations in the hot old summer time.

Field Marshal Flinn's Legislative Committee is formulating its demands. Harrisburg will be an interesting place this winter.

Even the 'skeeters voted for Teddy.

Connellsville will engage in the business of hardening copper. We are getting down to first principles. Hardening copper was long regarded as one of the lost arts, but the wisdom of hoary ages cannot be withheld from modern science which has the ancients distanced by many times the time limit.

The Indian Creek Valley is to have an express service and it is about to demand free coal delivery. The management is Progressive.

The State Railroad Commission has made no fuss, but its record shows that it has been right busy.

A Bessontown villager came to Connellsville a few days ago and got lost in the suburbs of Greenwood. The Embryonic City was too vast for his limited comprehension. Bessontown tourists will perhaps be wise to provide themselves with a map and a guidebook of Connellsville when they visit here.

All the changes made are minor ones. The addition will be some 70 feet wide and will extend along the rear of the church.

THE QUEBEC AFFAIR

By Isaacs of Yukon.

The star attraction of the day was between James Wolfe, heavy-weight champion of England, and Louis Joseph Montcalm, heavy-weight champ of the sunny isle of France.

More than two years had been wasted by the two champs to get together. The place and terms of the battle were finally agreed upon after many delays. King George the Second wanted the mill to be ground out south of the St. Lawrence river but Louis the Fifteenth requested that the game be played at Quebec.

Quebec was the place. For many years George had been Wolfe's training-master and had worked him out to a wonderful degree of efficiency. Louis had run Montcalm through all the latest tactics known in the manly art. Both men understood well Middletown rules and Ruffsdale center rushes.

The morning was bright and clear and shrill as the Legonier locomotive whistle when sounded to scare the cows off the track at Bell's crossing. The advertising had been a wonder worker in bringing out the crowd. Train loads of English people took advantage of the cheap cut rates to Quebec and they were there by the thousands. French people not wishing to be outdone by their British neighbors, turned out to the man.

The Business Men's Association of Quebec consented to have the bout pulled off in town but the ministerial society forced the chief burgess to order the affair to be pulled off outside the borough limits. This was agreed to.

The Plains of Abraham was staked off and roped in. Wolfe and his crowd appeared first on the scene. At the front of the ropers, he bowed and said: "The world will little note, nor long remember what we do here but they will never forget what we say here. It is for us to do something worthy of the sons of Britain."

After the roaring calmed down in Wolfe's corner, Montcalm came out of his tent and said: "Forty centuries are looking down upon us. The bright sun rises and sets on a sin-cursed earth. The next wind that sweeps from the southwest school board will bring the clash of sounding arms. We must fight it out on this line if it takes all fall."

The two gladiators then locked horns. They pushed and shoved each other across the mat until Wolfe slipped on a banana peel and down he went. He pulled Montcalm with him. When the gong sounded, both men arose. Their pants and shirts were torn so as to expose their muscles. Betting was ten to seven in favor of the Frenchman.

At the end of the second round, both men came out even. At the third, the Englishman had the better of the biscuits. The fourth and fifth rounds were blow for blow events. At the end of the tenth round, Montcalm got a blow under the short ribs that put him down. As he fell he kicked Wolfe in the stomach and he went down, too.

Wolfe lay in the green grass like the dying gladiator when he tried to die in the Keagy theatre the other night and had to be dragged out by Manager Charlie Cowell. "They are making a home run," said an assistant sergeant-at-arms. "Who is making a home run?" asked Wolfe. "The Frenchman, the Frenchman," exclaimed a man in the bleachers.

"Then I die happy," said Wolfe.

SENIORS TURNED THE JOKE ON THEMSELVES

Although the White Dove of Peace Floated Out They Were Aroused.

"THE JUNIORS GOT THEIR GOAT"

Funny Incident at Scottdale's Successful Commencement When Forty-one Were Graduated From the High School Last Evening—Notes.

SCOTTDALE May 30—Using a descriptive phrase not found in any of the school readers The Juniors got the Senior's goat at the close of the Commencement exercises last evening And to get for the Seniors had scored high will up on their Junior brethren in an incident not down on the program Before a packed house of the friends of the 41 members of the graduating class and when time came for the handing out of the diplome a large bunnet inscribed with the figure of the class of the future 1913 dropped dramatically into view right above the Senior class A few seconds later from the recesses above the stage there flo ted Lake Erie dove bearing the prized white ribbons of the Senior This amused everyone It seemed generally considered then that the honors were at least even with the two classes

But when Superintendent Principal Landis Truxal started to give out the diplomas assisted by William Pickard a member of the class some Seniors refused to accept their diplomas under the 1913 flag Mr Truxal handled the situation superbly in a few words Even the class that was the time and the place for them to receive their parchment The Directors were seated on the stage and Robert Stump a member of the class used the Seniors that their dignity would be far better observed by paying no attention to the 1913 flag The two men were applauded heartily by the audience and the diplomas were then given out The interest between the Seniors and Juniors enthused the Freshmen that they then put out a flag that looked very impromptu

The matter was the only one that broke the smoothness of one of the most perfectly conducted commencements ever held in Scottdale but which only served to show the ability of the Superintendent in handling a situation the exercises throughout included the Senior afterward complete forgetting entirely the part they played in making attention to the Junior emblem

Hardy's orchestra opened the program with a selection rendered in the opera house The place was filled to every seat with the auditorium a sea of white dresses in the center of which the graduating class and the Scottdale High School Faculty the members of the Board of Education and the speakers of the evening Gems of Literature were seated on the east side of the stage With the invocation by Rev Hendrickson past of the First United Brethren church the musical numbers of the charm were rendered The choruses made a harmonious and inspiring picture the Seniors in gold trimmed a striking background for the charming leader Miss Ione M Williams the latest of the class was in white with a fluffy white ribbon in the class colors Miss Williams received a shower of flowers from the class and friends Her baton was a gift from the class

The program was as follows Invocation Rev Hendrickson Piano Solo Miss Ione M Williams Class History Miss Ethel Burtenshaw and Olive Ellenberger Class Prophecy Miss Lessie Caldwell and Miss James Hook Lieutenstein Serpentine Song and The Two Grenadiers Chorus

The two hundred and forty Miss Burtenshaw and Olive Ellenberger each gave readings The former spoke of commencement as the beginning of future and it dealt this subject mainly to honor the names of the best known writers who have come from this State while Miss Ghidey oration was delivered in which she sounded the keynote of the class

Mr Skemp introduced Secretary Farquhar of the American Sheet & Tin Plate Company official who spoke on Salt and Advice It was an address that was social with humor and full of practical common sense It kept the audience on the jump for it brought message after another

The Alumni reception at the High School building brought out a large crowd of graduates all along the line from the first class in 1914 This was a delightful affair in which all seemed to enjoy themselves greatly On the program was the "Presidents Address by Edwin W Lowe "Welcome to the Old Class by Dr N Sillers "Response by William Litter Jr The Alumni by Attorney C J Hefner of Greensburg and a former principal of the Scottdale schools by Mr G I Kolb Address by Robert Skemp and an address by Landis Lingner the roll call of the classes and Auld Lang Syne

Today the Freshman class is on a picnic to the Mt Vernon ore mines the Juniors and Sophomores will go to Killarney Park on Friday and the Seniors to Jacobs Creek Falls

The Effects of Opiates.

THAT INFANTS are peculiarly susceptible to opium and its various preparations all of which are narcotic, is well known Even in the smallest doses, if continued these opiates cause changes in the functions and growth of the cells which are likely to become permanent, causing imbecility mental perversion a craving for alcohol or narcotics in later life Nervous diseases such as intractable nervous dyspepsia and lack of staying powers are a result of dosing with opiates or narcotics to keep children quiet in their infancy The rule among physicians is that children should never receive opiates in the smallest doses for more than a day at a time, and only then if unavoidable

The administration of Anodynes, Drops, Cordials, Soothing Syrups and other narcotics to children by any but a physician cannot be too strongly decried, and the druggist should not be a party to it Children who are ill need the attention of a physician, and it is nothing less than a crime to dose them willfully with narcotics

Castoria contains no narcotics if it bears the signature of Chas H Fletcher

Genuine Castoria always bears the signature of Chas. H. Fletcher.

THE COKE MARKET CONTINUES STRONG.

Second Half Furnace Contracts Bring $2.50 or Better.

FARRELL'S VISIT SIGNIFICANT

In Some Quarters It is Believed Steel Corporation May Be in Market for Merchant Coke—Buying for June Delivery is Active at Fair Figure.

From The Weekly Courier.

PITTSBURG, May 29.—The Connellsville coke market continues to show strength, and it is now out of the question to seriously consider second half furnace contracts at less than $2.50 at ovens, while many operators expect to obtain a still higher figure.

The visit of President Farrell of the Steel Corporation to the Connellsville coke region has attracted considerable attention in Pittsburg coke circles. It is represented that this official has not usually taken particular interest in coke, and his interest at this time may therefore prove to be significant. There is a rumor that the Steel Corporation may purchase some coke, but there does not seem to be any definite basis for the report. Certainly Farrell's visit would not indicate it, as such an operation would be conducted by the Frick company officials.

Several important furnace coke contracts are under negotiation for the second half, but have not reached the closing stage yet. It is understood that none of the negotiations are on a basis under $2.50 at ovens. There is nothing to report in the matter of second half contracts beyond what was reported last week, the closing of 12,000 tons a month at $2.50, a new high price in this buying movement, two early contracts having been made at $2.35 and a later one at $2.40. Thus far in the movement about 40,000 tons a month of second half coke have been placed under contract.

Buying for June delivery has been active, partly for account of furnaces which have been buying from month to month and partly on account of idle furnaces getting into blast. Sales reported in the week, for June delivery, include 8,000 tons at $2.35, 12,500 tons at $2.30 and 15,000 tons at $2.25, making a total of 35,500 tons. Besides this various odd lots for earlier delivery were sold at about $2.25, making the total turnover in the week in spot and prompt coke about 60,000 tons.

Foundry coke has lagged decidedly behind furnace coke in point of bringing better prices, and is not doing much if any better than furnace coke. Foundry coke of fairly good grade is available at $2.35 to $2.50, although most of the old line producers are holding to about $2.75. In the matter of contracts some of the sellers are also weak, and there have been many offers of contract coke at $2.50, while in exceptional cases it has been offered down to $2.35 or lower, though in such cases the coke may not have been fully up to the standard.

The relative weakness in foundry coke is explained partly by the fact that many foundries loaded up in anticipation of the coal mining suspension, while others placed additional orders for so many cars a week, and instead of stopping such shipments on the bituminous settlement the foundries waited until the anthracite matter was adjusted also, having in mind the very fancy prices, up to $15 or $18 a ton, they have sometimes paid during suspensions in the anthracite region. This seems to have caused a temporary surplus in foundry coke, or at any rate has prevented there being such a scarcity as has occurred in furnace coke. The condition is presumably only temporary, as producers can adjust their production to whichever grade is the more profitable. We revise quotations as follows:

Prompt furnace	$2.25@$2.35
Contract furnace	$2.50
Prompt foundry	$2.35@$2.50
Contract foundry	$2.40@$2.75

The local pig iron market has been extremely dull the past week, and prices do not show the advancing tendency that has been so confidently predicted. It is claimed among sellers that there will not be enough pig iron to go around, considering the present light production and the fact that hitherto foundries have been drawing upon stocks, either their own or the stocks of merchant furnaces. The merchant furnaces of the country at large are operating at less than two-thirds capacity, while the steel works furnaces are operating almost at full capacity. Prices continue to be quoted as follows: Bessemer, $14.26; basic, $13; No. 2 foundry, $13.25; gray forge, $13; malleable, $13, all f. o. b. valley furnaces. 50 cents higher delivered Pittsburg.

WHERE ARE THEY?

Western Maryland Advertises Acres of Coal and Many Ovens.

The Western Maryland railroad, in a bond prospectus recently issued, makes the following statement:

"Within a very short time, the new 87-mile extension should be ready for operation and will make connection with the Pittsburg & Lake Erie railroad and be operated under a 99-year traffic agreement between the two companies. This extension has been financed from the sale of stock with no increase in fixed charges of the company.

"The company controls about 135,000 acres of coal land, well equipped with mining plants and coke ovens. The new extension will secure the outlet for the company's coal at Pittsburg and on the Lakes, as well as securing a very large volume of traffic collected throughout the Middle West by the New York Central lines and which will be moved to tidewater at Baltimore."

GOVERNMENT RAILROAD EXPENSIVE PROPOSITION

Cost of Line to Alaskan Coal Fields Estimated by Experts to be Not Less Than $15,000,000.

The bill placed before Congress by Representative Sulzer of New York, for creation of an Alaskan Commission, with the ultimate intention of building a Government railroad from Cape Resurrection Bay to the Tanana and Yukon rivers in Alaska, and tapping the Matanuska coal fields, is in line with the ideas of Secretary Fisher of the Interior Department. The proposal contemplates using the machinery now being used to construct the Panama canal.

Aside from the question as to the advisability of the Federal Government entering the railroad field in competition with private capital, the proposition presents many and great obstacles. In the first place to construct a railroad to the Matanuska fields, even using the part of the Alaska Central already built, would cost the Government, it is estimated, $15,000,000. The line would have to cross three great mountain ranges, with sharp curves and severe adverse grades, in a country which will be always subject to heavy snowslides. The terrific difficulties encountered in building the Copper River railroad, which cost $20,000,000, is an ample illustration, and after the proposed new line was constructed the expense of hauling and upkeep would be very heavy.

While the Matanuska coal fields are estimated to contain about 500,000,000 tons of coal, the Bering river coal fields, which are only 40 miles from the main line of the Copper River railroad, contain approximately 600,000,000 tons of coal, of equal or better grade than the Matanuska coal. Copper river interests have graded the approach to the Bering fields and laid a portion of the track so that the line could be completed within a year at a comparatively small expense. The road would be on a practically water-level route, and would encounter no territory where snowslides could ever occur. Distance from Bering fields to tide water is 90 miles, or approximately one-half of the distance from the Matanuska fields to tidewater.

Cost of transportation and upkeep on such a spur from the Copper river line, it is estimated, would be 25% of similar charges on the proposed Government line, and freight charges correspondingly less. The Copper river interests would be willing to build the spur to the Bering fields without any expense to the Government in order to obtain the haulage of coal for the coaling station and naval vessels.

GEN. M'CLERNAND BORN 100 YEARS AGO TODAY

Was Great General Although Friction With Grant Obscured His Fame to Some Extent.

WASHINGTON, D. C., May 30.—On this, the day universally observed as a day for honoring the memory of the soldiers who fought for the Union, it seems appropriate to call attention to the fact that the day also marks the 100th anniversary of the birth of Gen. John A. McClernand, one of the distinguished leaders of the Federal army. While his historic quarrel with Gen. Grant has cast something of a shadow over Gen. McClernand's fame, no historian has ever ventured to question Gen. McClernand's patriotism as a man or ability as a soldier.

Gen. McClernand was born in Hardinsburg, Ky., May 30, 1812, but spent the greater part of his life in Illinois. He was a fellow townsman and personal acquaintance of Lincoln. Successful in law and in politics, a man of undoubted ability and energy, it was natural enough that he should receive from the President a commission in the army at the beginning of the war. On order of the President Gen. Grant placed McClernand in command of a corps. But for some reason the strongest ill-feeling existed between the two soldiers and Gen. Grant took the first opportunity, during the operations against Vicksburg, to relieve McClernand of his command pending charges. The charges were not sustained and McClernand was restored to active command. He resigned from the army, however, before the close of 1864.

After the war Gen. McClernand was elected Circuit Judge for the Sangamon district in Illinois, and in 1876 he was chairman of the Democratic national convention which nominated Samuel J. Tilden for the presidency. Gen. McClernand died at his home in Springfield, Ill., Sept. 20, 1900.

Government is Making Thorough Inquiry Into the Treatment of I. W. W. Members by Vigilantes at San Diego

SAN DIEGO, Cal., May 30.—The Grand Jury is still investigating the trouble between the Industrial Workers of the World and citizens, and officials of the Federal government are also conducting an inquiry. Members of the I. W. W. are demanding the indictment of J. M. Porter, the alleged leader of the vigilantes. He is charged with instigating the attacks on the members of the I. W. W. and with taking part in driving many of them out of town. Fifteen or 20 agitators were escorted in one bunch to the edge of the city and were warned not to return. A few who defied the order and returned were roughly handled later. Governor Johnson is taking a deep interest in the situation and has sent Attorney General Webb here to aid the local prosecuting officers in untangling the muddle.

STOCK INCREASE TO FINANCE BIG PROJECT

American Water Works & Guarantee Company Issue $10,000,000 Stock

FOR CHEAT RIVER PROPOSITION

Proceeds of the Sale Will Be Devoted to Development of Big Hydro-Electric Project in This County. Earnings of the Company Pay Good.

The American Water Works & Guarantee Company has increased its capital stock from $10,000,000 to $20,000,000 by the issuance of $10,000,000 6% cumulative stock. Proceeds will be used mainly in construction of a hydro-electric power plant on the Cheat river.

The American Water Works & Guarantee Company has been in operation for thirty years. It controls and operates water works in eighty-two cities and towns, a hydro-electric proposition in Southern Idaho, with an ultimate capacity of 92,000 horsepower, three irrigation companies in Idaho and one in California, 202 miles of traction line in Pennsylvania, supplies light and power to 110 towns, and owns bituminous coal mines in Pennsylvania of a daily output of 18,700 tons.

The company has $10,000,000 common and $10,000,000 preferred, the latter now being offered. It has no funded debt and no direct liability except current accounts payable, less than $100,000. Beyond the 6% cumulative preferred dividend, and after the common stock shall have received 6% cumulative dividend, the preferred stock shall share equally with the common in all extra dividends paid by the company.

It is estimated that the profits of the company for the fiscal year ending April 30, 1913, will be about $1,500,000 and for 1913, $2,000,000; equal to 10% on both classes of stock. Previous to the issue of the $10,000,000 preferred stock, the company has paid an average of 6% a year on its common stock, and in February of present year paid 100% stock dividend out of surplus account.

1912 BIG YEAR IN RAILROAD BUILDING

More Track Will be Laid Than in Any of the Previous Four Years.

LITTLE NEW MILEAGE, HOWEVER

New Railroad Capital is Centered Principally Upon Second Tracks and Enlarged Terminals—Little New Work East of the Mississippi.

It is already pretty definitely settled that 1912 is to be a more active year in railroad construction and improvement work than any of the last four. It will probably not bring into use as much actual new mileage, for two reasons. One is that several previous years saw the completion of such lines as the Puget Sound, the Western Pacific and the Virginian, which had been under construction for many years. Another is that new railroad capital is now being directed into second tracks and enlarged terminals, rather than into wholly new mileage. But the construction of this year will unquestionably add much to the transportation facilities of the country, especially as a very free equipment buying movement has recently set in.

Present indications are that the West will see much more of this activity than the East and that particularly in the Northwest, where partial crop failures in two successive years and a discouraging defection of young farmers to Canada put a quietus on many railroad projects, building of new lines is to be resumed. James J. Hill has laid out a single line of 500 miles or more, to be an alternate route across the Continental Divide, but only a small part of this will be constructed this year. Without it, Great Northern will add some 300 miles of line, now well advanced to its operations by harvest time. Besides, Carl Gray, the new President of the Great Northern, has openly declared that henceforth there is to be greater activity on the part of his road in Oregon and Washington.

East of the Mississippi river little new construction work is to be undertaken this year and most of the branch line extension will be done by Southern roads. But the Southern as well as the trunk line roads are giving most of their attention to increasing their second running tracks and yard facilities. Some attention is being given to the demands of the larger cities for new passenger terminals, but in several places, as in Philadelphia, Boston, Pittsburg and Chicago, these matters are more or less involved in the question of electrification of suburban lines and progress will necessarily be slow.

THE WRECK OF THE TITAN

by MORGAN ROBERTSON

MORGAN ROBERTSON.

He cut the flannel lining from his coat and from that of the sleeves made nether garments for the little limbs, doubling the surplus length over the ankles and tying in place with rope yarns from a boat lacing. The body lining he wrapped around her waist, inclosing the arms, and around the whole he passed turn upon turn of canvas in strips, starting the mummylike bundle with yarns much as a sailor secures chafing gear to the doubled parts of a hawser—a process, when complete, that would have aroused the indignation of any mother who saw it. But he was only a man and suffering mental and physical anguish.

By the time he had finished the child had recovered consciousness and was protesting its misery in a feeble, wailing cry. But he cared not stop, to become stiffened with cold and pain. There was plenty of fresh water from melting ice, scattered in pools. The bear would furnish food, but they needed fire to cook this food, keep them warm and the dangerous inflammation from their hurts and to raise a smoke to be seen by passing craft.

He recklessly drank from the bottle, feeding the stimulant and reasoning, perhaps rightly, that no ordinary drug could affect him in his present condition. Then he examined the wreckage, most of it good kindling wood. Partly above, partly below the pile, was a steel lifeboat, decked over at right ends, now doubled to more than a right angle and resting on its side. With canvas hung over one half and a small fire in the other, it promised, by its conducting property, a warmer and better shelter than the bridge. A sailor without matches is an anomaly. He whittled shavings, kindled the fire, hung the canvas and brought the child, who begged piteously for a drink of water.

He found a tin can—possibly left in a leaky boat before its final hoist to the davits—and gave her a drink, to which he had added a few drops of the whisky. Then he thought of breakfast. Cutting a steak from the hind quarters of the bear, he toasted it on the end of a splinter and found it sweet and satisfying, but when he attempted to feed the child he understood the necessity of freeing its arms, which he did, sacrificing his left shirt sleeve to cover them. The change and the food stopped its crying for awhile, and Rowland lay down with it in the warm boat. Before the day had passed the whisky was gone and he was delirious with fever, while the child was but little better.

CHAPTER V.

Marooned on an Iceberg.

WITH lucid intervals, during which he replenished or rebuilt the fire, cooked the bear meat and fed and dressed the wounds of the child, this delirium lasted three days. His suffering was intense. His arm, the seat of throbbing pain, had swollen to twice the natural size, while his side prevented his taking a full breath voluntarily. He had paid no attention to his own hurts, and it was either the vigor of a constitution that years of dissipation had not impaired or some anti-febrile property of the bear meat or the absence of the exciting whisky that won the battle. He rekindled the fire with his last match on the evening of the third day and looked around the darkening horizon, sane, but feeble in body and mind.

If a sail had appeared in the interim he had not seen it, nor was there one in sight now. Too weak to climb the slope, he returned to the boat, where the child, exhausted from fruitless crying, was now sleeping. His unskillful and rather heroic manner of wrapping it up to protect it from cold had no doubt contributed largely to the closing of its wounds by forcibly keeping it still, though it must have added largely to its present sufferings. He looked for a moment on the wan, tear stained little face, with its fringe of tangled curls peeping above the wrappings of canvas, and, stooping painfully down, kissed it softly, but the kiss awakened it, and it cried for its mother. He could not soothe it, nor could he try, and with a formless, wordless curse against destiny welling up from his heart he left it and sat down on the wreckage at some distance away.

"We'll very likely get well," he mused gloomily, "unless I let the fire go out. What then? We can't last longer than the bear, and not much longer than the bear. We must be out of the tracks. We were about 600 miles out when we struck, and the current sticks to the fog belt here—about west-sou'west—but that's the surface water. These deep fellows have currents of their own. There's no fog. We must be to the southward of the belt—between the lanes. They'll run their boats in the other lane after this, I think—the money grabbing wretches. Curse them if they've drowned her. Curse them, with their water tight compartments and their lowering of the lookouts. Twenty-four boats for 3,000 people, lashed down with tarred gripe lashings, thirty men to clear them away and not an ax on the boat deck or a sheath knife on a man. Could she have got away? If they got that boat down they might have taken her in from the steps, and the mate knew I had her child. He would tell her. Her name must be Myra too. It was her voice I heard in that dream. That was hasheesh. What did they drug me for? But the whisky was all right. It's all done with now unless I get ashore, but will I?"

The moon rose above the castellated structure to the left, flooding the icy beach with ashen gray light, sparkling in a thousand points from the caverns, streams and rippling pools, throwing into blackest shadow the gullies and hollows and bringing to his mind in spite of the weird beauty of the scene a crushing sense of loneliness—of littleness—as though the vast pile of inorganic desolation which held him was of far greater importance than himself and all the hopes, plans and fears of his lifetime. The child had cried itself to sleep again, and he paced up and down the ice.

"Up there," he said moodily, looking into the sky, where a few stars shone faintly in the flood from the moon—"up there—somewhere—they don't know just where—but somewhere up above, is the Christians' heaven. Up there is their good God, who has placed Myra's child here—their good God—and down below us, somewhere again, are their hell and their bad god, whom they invented themselves. And they give us our choice—heaven or hell. It is not so—not so. The great mystery is not solved. The human heart is not helped in this way. No good, merciful God created this world or its conditions. Whatever may be the nature of the causes at work beyond our mental vision, one fact is indubitably proved—that the qualities of mercy, goodness, justice, play no part in the government of the belt—between the lanes. They'll run their boats in the other lane after this, I think—the money grabbing wretches. Curse them if they've drowned her. Curse them, with their water tight compartments and their lowering of the lookouts. Twenty-four boats for 3,000 people, lashed down with tarred gripe lashings, thirty men to clear them away and not an ax on the boat deck or a sheath knife on a man. Could she have got away? If they got that boat down they might have taken her in from the steps, and the mate knew I had her child. He would tell her. Her name must be Myra too. It was her voice I heard in that dream. That was hasheesh. What did they drug me for? But the whisky was all right. It's all done with now unless I get ashore, but will I?"

"Bark ahoy! Bark ahoy! Take us off!"

scheme. And yet they say the core of all religions on earth is the belief in this. Is it, or is it the cowardly, human fear of the unknown that impels the savage mother to throw her babe to a crocodile, that impels the civilized man to endow churches, that has kept in existence from the beginning a class of soothsayers, medicine men, priests and clergymen, all living on the hopes and fears excited by themselves?

"And people pray—millions of them—and claim they are answered. Are they? Was ever supplication sent into that sky by troubled humanity answered or even heard? Who knows? They pray for rain and sunshine, and both come in time. They pray for health and success, and both are but natural in the marching of events. This is not evidence. But they say that they know, by spiritual uplifting, that they are heard and comforted and answered at the moment. Is not this a physiological experiment? Would they not feel equally tranquil if they repeated the multiplication table or boxed the compass?

"Millions have believed this—that prayers are answered—and these millions have prayed to different gods. Were they all wrong or all right? Would a tentative prayer be listened to? Admitting that the Bibles and Korans and Vedas are misleading and unreliable, may there not be an unseen, unknown being who knows my heart, who is watching me now? If so, this being gave me my reason, which doubts him, and on him is the responsibility. And would this being, if he exists, overlook a defect for which I am not to blame and listen to a prayer from me based on the mere chance that I might be mistaken? Can an unbeliever, in the full strength of his reasoning powers, come to such trouble that he can no longer stand alone, but must cry for help to an imagined power? Can such time come to a sane man—to me?" He looked at the dark line of vacant horizon. It was seven miles away; New York was 900, the moon in the east over 200,000 and the stars above any number of billions. He was alone with a sleeping child, a dead bear and the unknown. He walked softly to the boat and looked at the little one for a moment; then, raising his head, he whispered, "For you, Myra."

Sinking to his knees, the atheist lifted his eyes to the heavens and with his feeble voice and the fervor born of helplessness prayed to the God that he denied. He begged for the life of the waif in his care, for the safety of the mother, so needful to the little one, and for courage and strength to do his part and bring them together. But beyond the appeal for help in the service of others not one word or expressed thought of his prayer included himself as a beneficiary. So much for pride. As he rose to his feet the flying jib of a bark appeared around the corner of ice to the right of the beach, and a moment later the whole moonlit fabric came into view, wafted along by the faint westerly air, not half a mile away.

He sprang to the fire, forgetting his pain, and, throwing on wood, made a blaze. He hailed in a frenzy of excitement, "Bark ahoy! Bark ahoy! Take us off!" And a deep toned answer came across the water.

"Wake up, Myra," he cried as he lifted the child. "Wake up. We're going away."

"We goin' to mamma?" she asked, with no symptoms of crying.

"Yes, we're going to mamma now—that is," he added to himself, "if that clause in the prayer is considered."

Fifteen minutes later, as he watched the approach of a white quarter boat, he muttered: "That bark was there, half a mile back in this wind, before I thought of praying. Is that prayer answered? Is she safe?"

On the first floor of the London Royal Exchange is a large apartment studded with desks, around and between which surges a hurrying, shouting crowd of brokers, clerks and messengers. Fringing this apartment are doors and hallways leading to adjacent rooms and offices, and scattered through it are bulletin boards, on which are daily written in duplicate the marine casualties of the world. At one end is a raised platform, sacred to the presence of an important functionary. In the technical language of the "city," the apartment is known as the "room" and the functionary as the "caller," whose business it is to call out in a mighty sing song voice the names of members wanted at the door and the bare particulars of bulletin news prior to its being chalked out for reading.

It is the headquarters of Lloyd's—the immense association of underwriters, brokers and shipping men which, beginning with the customers at Edward Lloyd's coffee house in the latter part of the seventeenth century, has, retaining his name for a title, developed into a corporation so well equipped, so splendidly organized and powerful, that kings and ministers of state appeal to it at times for foreign news.

Not a master or mate sails under the English flag but whose record, even to forecastle fights, is tabulated at Lloyd's for the inspection of prospective employers. Not a ship is cast away on any inhabitable coast of the world during underwriters' business hours but what that mighty shipsong cry announces the event at Lloyd's within thirty minutes.

One of the adjoining rooms is known as the chart room. Here can be found in perfect order and sequence, each on its roller, the newest charts of all nations, with a library of nautical literature describing to the last detail the harbors, lights, rocks, shoals and sailing directions of every coast line shown on the charts; the tracks of latest storms, the changes of ocean currents and the whereabouts of derelicts and icebergs. A member at Lloyd's acquires in time a theoretical knowledge of the sea seldom exceeded by the men who navigate it.

Another apartment, the captain's room, is given over to joy and refreshment, and still another, the antithesis of the last, is the intelligence office, where anxious ones inquire for and are told the latest news of this or that overdue ship.

On the day when the assembled throng of underwriters and brokers had been thrown into an uproarious panic the crier's announcement that the great Titan was destroyed and the papers of Europe and America were issuing extras giving the meager details of the arrival at New York of one boat load of her people this office had been crowded with weeping women and worrying men, who would ask and remain to ask again for more news. And when it came—a later cablegram—giving the story of the wreck and the names of the captain, first officer, boatswain, seven sailors and one lady passenger as those of the saved a feeble old gentleman had raised his voice in a quavering scream, high above the sobbing of women, and said:

"My daughter-in-law is safe, but where is my son, where is my son, and my grandchild?" Then he had hurried away, but was back again the next day, and the next. And when, on the tenth day of waiting and watching, he learned of another boat load of sailors and children arriving at Gibraltar, he shook his head slowly, muttering "George, George," and left the room. That night, after telegraphing the consul at Gibraltar of his coming, he crossed the channel.

In the first tumultuous riot of inquiry, when underwriters had climbed over desks and each other to hear again of the wreck of the Titan, one—the noisiest of all, a corpulent, hook nosed man with flashing black eyes—had broken away from the crowd and made his way to the captain's room, where, after a draft of brandy, he had seated himself heavily with a groan that came from his soul.

"Father Abraham," he muttered; "this will ruin me!"

Others came in, some to drink, some to condole, all to talk.

"Read it, Meyer. Read it."

"Hit hard, Meyer?" asked one.

"Ten thousand," he answered, gloomily.

"Serves you right," said another unkindly. "Have more baskets for your eggs. Knew you'd bring up."

Though Mr. Meyer's eyes sparkled at this, he said nothing, but drank himself stupid and was assisted home by one of his clerks. From this on, neglecting his business, excepting to occasionally visit the bulletins, he spent his time in the captain's room, drinking heavily and bemoaning his luck. On the tenth day he read with watery eyes, posted on the bulletin below the news of the arrival at Gibraltar of the second boat load of people, the following:

"Life buoy of Royal Age, London, picked up among wreckage in latitude 45.20, north longitude 64.31 west. Ship Arctic, Boston, Captain Brandt."

"Oh, mine good God!" he howled as he rushed toward the captain's room.

"Poor devil! Poor fool!" said one observer to another. "He covered the whole of the Royal Age and the biggest chunk of the Titan. It'll take his wife's diamonds to settle."

Three weeks later Mr. Meyer was aroused from a brooding lethargy by a crowd of shouting underwriters, who rushed into the captain's room, seized him by the shoulders and hurried him out and up to a bulletin.

"Read it, Meyer! Read it! What d'you think of it?" With some difficulty he read aloud, while they watched his face:

"John Rowland, sailor of the Titan, with child passenger, name unknown, on board Peerless, Bath, at Christiansand, Norway. Both dangerously ill. Rowland speaks of ship cut in half night before loss of Titan."

"What do you make of it, Meyer? Royal Age, isn't it?" asked one.

"Yes," vociferated another, "I've figured back. Only ship not reported lately. Overdue two months. Was spoken same day fifty miles east of that iceberg!"

"Sure thing," said others. "Nothing said about it in the captain's statement. Looks queer."

"Vell, vhat of it?" said Mr. Meyer painfully and stupidly. "Dere is a collision clause in der Titan's policy. I merely buy the money to der steamship company instead of to der Royal Age people."

"But why did the captain conceal it?" they shouted at him. "What's his object—assured against collision suits?"

"Der looks of it, perhaps. Looks bad."

"Nonsense, Meyer! What's the matter with you? Which one of the lost tribes did you spring from? You're like none of your race—drinking yourself stupid like a good Christian. I've got a thousand on the Titan, and if I'm to pay it I want to know why. You've got the heaviest risk and the brain to fight for it. You've got to do it. Go home, straighten up and attend to this. We'll watch Rowland till you take hold. We're all caught."

They put him into a cab, took him to a Turkish bath and then home.

The next morning he was at his desk, clear eyed and clear headed, and for a few weeks was a busy, scheming man of business.

CHAPTER VI.

The Return of Rowland.

ON a certain morning about two months after the announcement of the loss of the Titan Mr. Meyer sat at his desk in the rooms busily writing when the old gentleman who had bewailed the death of his son in the intelligence office tottered in and took a chair beside him.

"Good morning, Mr. Selfridge," he said, scarcely looking up. "I suppose you have come to see der insurance paid over. Der sixty days are up."

"Yes, yes, Mr. Meyer," said the old gentleman wearily. "Of course as merely a stockholder I can take no active part. But I am a member here and naturally a little anxious. All I had in the world, even to my son and grandchild, was in the Titan."

"It is very sad, Mr. Selfridge. You have my deepest sympathy. I believe you are der largest holder of Titan stock, about £100,000, is it not?"

"About that."

"I am der heaviest insurer. So Mr. Selfridge this battle will be largely between you and myself."

"Battle! Is there to be any difficulty?" asked Mr. Selfridge anxiously.

"Perhaps; I do not know. Der underwriters and outside companies have placed matters in my hands and will not buy until I take der initiative. We must hear from one John Rowland, who, with a little child, was rescued from der berg and taken to Christiansand. He has been too sick to leave der ship which found him and is coming up der Thames in her this morning. I have a carriage at der dock and expect him at my office by noon. Dere is where we will dranspact this little pizness, not here."

"A child—saved!" queried the old gentleman. "Dear me! It may be little Myra. She was not at Gibraltar with the others. I would not care—I would not care much about the money if she was safe. But my son, my only son, is gone, and Mr. Meyer I am a ruined man if this insurance is not paid."

"And I am a ruined man if it is," said Mr. Meyer, rising. "Will you come around to der office, Mr. Selfridge? I expect der attorney and Captain Bryce are dere now." Mr. Selfridge arose and accompanied him to the street.

A rather meagerly furnished private office in Threadneedle street, partitioned off from a larger one bearing Mr. Meyer's name in the window, received the two men, one of whom, in the interests of good business, was soon to be impoverished. They had not waited a minute before Captain Bryce and Mr. Austen were announced and ushered in. Sleek, well fed and gentlemanly in manner, perfect types of the British naval officer, they bowed politely to Mr. Selfridge when Mr. Meyer introduced them as the captain and first officer of the Titan and seated themselves. A few moments later brought a shrewd looking person whom Mr. Meyer addressed as the attorney for the steamship company, but did not introduce, for such are the amenities of the English system of caste.

"Now, then, gentlemen," said Mr. Meyer, "I believe we can proceed to pizness up to a certain point—perhaps further. Mr. Thompson, you have the affidavit of Captain Bryce."

"I have," said the attorney, producing a document which Mr. Meyer glanced at and handed back.

"And in this statement, captain," he said, "you have sworn that der voyage was uneventful up to der moment of der wreck—that is," he added with an oily smile as he noticed the puling of the captain's face, "that nothing occurred to make der Titan less seaworthy or manageable?"

"That is what I swore to," said the captain with a little sigh.

"You are part owner, are you not, Captain Bryce?"

"I own five shares of the company's stock."

"I have examined der charter and der company lists," said Mr. Meyer. "Each boat of der company is so far as assessments and dividends are concerned, a separate company. I find you are listed as owning two sixty-seconds of der Titan stock. This makes you, under der law, part owner of der Titan and responsible as such."

"What do you mean, sir, by that word responsible?" said Captain Bryce quickly.

For answer Mr. Meyer elevated his black eyebrows, assumed an attitude of listening, looked at his watch and went to the door, which as he opened admitted the sound of carriage wheels.

"In here," he called to his clerks, then faced the captain.

"What do I mean, Captain Bryce?" he thundered. "I mean that you have concealed in your sworn statement all reference to der fact that you collided with and sunk the ship Royal Age on der night before the wreck of your own ship!"

"Who says so? How do you know it?" blustered the captain. "You have only that bulletin statement of the man Rowland, an irresponsible drunkard."

"The man was lifted aboard drunk at New York," broke in the first officer, "and remained in a condition of delirium tremens up to the shipwreck. We did not meet the Royal Age and are in no way responsible for her loss."

"Yes," added Captain Bryce, "and a man in that condition is liable to see anything. We listened to his ravings on the night of the wreck. He was on lookout—on the bridge, Mr. Austen, the boatsw'n, and myself were close to him."

Before Mr. Meyer's oily smile had indicated to the flustered captain that he had said too much the door opened and admitted Rowland, pale and weak, with empty left sleeve, leaning on the arm of a bronze bearded and manly looking giant who carried little Myra on the other shoulder and who said in the breezy tone of the quarter deck:

"O God, I thank thee!"

"Well, I've brought him half dead. But why couldn't you give me time to dock my ship? A mate can't do everything."

"And this is Captain Barry of der Peerless," said Mr. Meyer, taking his hand. "It is all right, my friend; you will not lose. And this is Mr. Rowland, and this is der little child. Sit down, my friend. I—congratulate you on your escape."

"Thank you," said Rowland weakly as he seated himself. "They cut my arm off at Christiansand, and I still live. That is my escape."

Captain Bryce and Mr. Austen, pale and motionless, stared hard at this man, in whose emaciated face, refined by suffering to the almost spiritual softness of age, they hardly recognized the features of the troublesome sailor of the Titan. His clothing, though clean, was ragged and patched.

Mr. Selfridge had arisen and was also staring, not at Rowland, but at the child, who, seated in the lap of the big Captain Barry, was looking around with wondering eyes. Her costume was unique. A dress of bagging stuff put together, as were her canvas shoes and hat, with sail twine in sailmaker's stitches, three to the inch, covered skirts and underclothing made from old flannel shirts. It represented many an hour's work of the watch below, lovingly bestowed by the crew of the Peerless, for the crippled Rowland could not sew. Mr. Selfridge approached, scanned the pretty features closely and asked:

"What is her name?"

"Her first name is Myra," answered Rowland. "She remembers that. But I have not learned her last name, though I knew her mother years ago—before her marriage."

COKER TEAM IS BEING REBUILT

Manager Mack Already Has Acceptances From Three New Players.

OTHERS WILL BE BROUGHT ON

Rain Yesterday Prevented New Leader From Showing What He Could Do But Two Games Here Today Will Give Fans a Line on Prospects.

Manager Jimmy Mack had no chance yesterday to show what the Coker team will do under his leadership because all games were postponed by rain. Today he will lead them in a pair of games against McKeesport here. Mack doesn't expect to win a pennant with the present aggregation but says when he gets his new players in line the team will look vastly different.

Owner Wilson and Manager Mack are almost constantly in conference discussing ways and means for bolstering up the team. Already their work is bringing results in acceptances from three new players, who will report immediately. They are Fitzpatrick, a pitcher from Buffalo, Dowling, an outfielder from New York and Richards, a shortstop from Washington. In addition to this Mack has applications from three players of the Richmond team in the United States league who want to get in the fold of organized baseball. At least nine new players will be secured.

Owner Wilson has suspended Player Escher, who was to have reported. Escher started to join the Cokers but went home and wired for his release, saying he had become intoxicated on the road. Secretary Farrell of the National Association will be asked to suspend Escher.

MINERS PRODUCE EVIDENCE IN ALLEGED ELECTION FRAUD

Bellevernon Witness Charges That Return Sheet Was Tampered With.

Prosecutors of the alleged fraud inquiry in the Pittsburg district United Mine Workers, produced at the investigation Wednesday, Edward Brakewell, secretary of Local No. 316, Bellevernon, who swore that the union's vote in the district referendum election had been tampered with. The local's vote for district president, he testified, was: Feehan 42, Hulapy 25, whereas the vote was reported to the district convention was Feehan 221, Hulapy 25, or a difference in favor of Feehan of 178 votes.

Brakewell examined the return sheet in the presence of the investigators and endeavored to point out how he believed the changes had been made by a few deft strokes with a pen and an ink eraser.

NEW FREIGHT PIER.

Is Completed By B. & O. at New York Terminal.

The Baltimore & Ohio railroad has just completed a new freight pier at its New York terminals at St. George, Staten Island. The pier is known as Pier No. 6. It is 415 feet long by 85 feet wide, and the substructure is built of piles, the capping and decking being frame. The superstructure is of steel covered with corrugated iron. The side walls, including windows, are all of metal and thoroughly fireproof. On the land end of the pier, on the second floor, is located an office for the agent and his force.

The new pier handles a great deal of export material, manufactured goods being shipped from the interior and unloaded on this pier to be loaded on vessels for foreign ports.

The work was executed under the supervision of M. A. Long, the railroad's architect.

NEW POSTAL CARS.

B. & O. Places All-Steel Coaches on Through Express Trains.

The Baltimore & Ohio railroad has placed 10 new all-steel postal cars in service on through express trains. The cars are a part of the recent equipment orders placed by the road and were built by the Pullman Company.

The steel postal cars are 70 feet long and are equipped with anti-telescoping devices. The interior finish is of fireproof agasote, an English composition more durable than wood. Washstands and toilet facilities are provided for the postal clerks and the cars are well ventilated.

The cars are electrically lighted and equipped with porch racks of latest design to hold mail and facilitate assorting mail matter in transit.

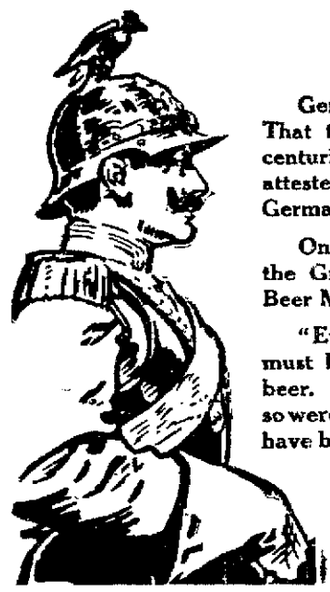
An Emperor's Edict on Beer


Germany is recognized as the home of beer. That this wholesome beverage has been for centuries held in the highest possible esteem is attested by the following expression from Germany's greatest ruler.
On the 13th of September, 1777, Frederick the Great issued his celebrated "Coffee and Beer Manifesto." It reads:
"Everybody is using coffee. If possible, this must be prevented. My people must drink beer. His Majesty was brought up on beer and so were his ancestors and officers. Many battles have been fought anp won by soldiers nourished on beer, and the King does not believe that coffee drinking soldiers can be depended on to endure hardships or to beat his enemies in case of the occurence of another war."
This was one hundred and forty years ago, and beer maintains its old-time prestige as the beverage of health.
Improvements have been made in brewing since that time, and the Pittsburgh Brewing Company
employ every one of them. They produce beer unexcelled by any other in the world
